

NEWSLETTER of the American Handel Society

Volume XLI, Number 1

Spring 2026

REPORT FROM THE FOURTEENTH HANDEL INSTITUTE CONFERENCE, LONDON (2025)

Luke Howard

The Fourteenth Handel Institute Conference, held in London from November 21 to 23, 2025, continued this organization's long tradition of intellectually invigorating and musically rewarding conference events, buoyed by the conviviality of exchange between like-minded scholar/musicians who have devoted their attentions to the life and works of Handel.

The conference kicked off with a Friday-evening reception in the Court Room at the Foundling Museum, hosted by the Museum's director Emma Ridgway and assisted by the Handel Institute's invaluable colleagues Katharine Hogg and Colin Coleman of the Gerald Coke Handel Collection. This was followed by a breathtaking concert in the museum's Picture Gallery upstairs, given by Adrian Butterfield and the London Handel Players, featuring music by Handel and some of his Italian and German "friends and colleagues" (as the program put it), including Geminiani, Telemann, Quantz, and Haym. Between the quartet, trio and solo sonatas, and other permutations of the ensemble, the performers took a moment or two to speak about the history and quirks of their particular instruments, and how Handel and his contemporaries wrote idiomatically for them. Deeply insightful and comprehensive program notes by David Vickers were small (but much appreciated) compensation for the fact that he was unable to attend the conference in person this year.

Conference sessions began the following morning at Bridewell Hall, an elegant and accommodating Grade II-listed assembly space tucked into a side alley just off Fleet Street. After a welcome and some opening remarks from Donald Burrows, Chair of the Handel Institute, the first session—titled "Cannons and Caravans"—consisted of papers by Graydon Beeks (Pomona College, California, and President of the American Handel Society) and Donald Burrows himself. Beeks discussed materials from Handel's Op. 2 Trio Sonatas that are closely related to works known to have been composed at Cannons from 1717–18, and which therefore might help narrow the possible composition dates for the sonatas. Burrows reviewed musicians from the 1740s and '50s who, in addition to performing with Handel in London, maintained stable professional relationships and activities in other cities including Dublin and Edinburgh, furthering the spread of Handel's music during this period.

continued on p. 2

CAMBRIDGE HANDEL OPERA COMPANY, IMENEO, FESTIVAL THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE, UK, MARCH 23–28, 2026

Katie Hawks (Cambridge, UK)

Left to right: Bethany Horak-Hallett (Tirinto), Timothy Nelson (Imeneo), and Ellie Neate (Rosmene) in the CHOC production of Handel's Imeneo. Photograph by Craig Fuller.

A low-budget production in a venue not set up as a theater may sound inauspicious, but CHOC's Imeneo at the Festival Theatre was an acme of how such things should be done. The Festival Theatre is a hidden gem: most of the locals in the audience did not know about it. I myself have been wanting to see a baroque opera in there for quarter of a century, and I hope that this is not a one-off. The theater dates from 1814, built by the same man as the Theatre Royal in Bury St. Edmunds. It now belongs to the Cambridge Buddhist Centre and is used for prayers rather than performances, so in addition to importing sets and costumes, all the lighting had to be imported as well. Luckily, Cambridge is one of those places that happens to have a top-notch amateur stage tech club (another hidden gem). The decor is workaday, the facilities adequate but low-key. It is small—gone are the

continued on p. 3

IN THIS ISSUE

Report from the Fourteenth Handel Institute Conference – Luke Howard
Cambridge Handel Opera Company, Imeneo – Katie Hawks
From the President's Desk – Graydon Beek
Announcements & Call for Papers
2025 Circle Members & Donors
New Book, Recent Publications, & Upcoming Events

The second morning session, “Handel’s Music in Eighteenth-Century Italy,” featured an examination by Joe Lockwood (Newcastle University) of performances and arrangements of Handel’s music in the home of Sir William Hamilton, English ambassador to Naples and Sicily, and the consequent influence on Neapolitan (and English) aesthetics of the late 18th century. Carmela Bongiovanni (Genoa Conservatory) then offered thoughtful observations on some curious 18th-century manuscripts in the library of the Genoa Conservatory—not an institution closely associated with Handel’s music—that indicate some potentially intriguing connections to Handel and his circle.

After lunch, Donald Burrows returned to the podium on relatively short notice (but with no shortage of materials or insight) to present yet more fascinating and significant findings from his research for CUP’s George Frideric Handel: Collected Documents series. Blake Johnson (Campbellsville University, Kentucky) followed with a paper on lament arias with oboe obbligato in Handel’s early operas, focusing particularly on how the choice of solo oboe in a number of these arias inflects our understanding of gender and cultural norms. Carrie Churnside (Royal Birmingham Conservatoire) concluded the session with a discussion on the character of Horatio (Orazio) in the composite opera Muzio Scevola (1721), for which Handel contributed the third and final act. The presentation offered details on how composers, librettist, and performers portrayed early Roman history on the London stage.

The final session of the day began with Olive Baldwin’s and Thelma Wilson’s lovingly researched performance history of the air “Lord Remember David,” which was especially popular in the 19th century although with a text not original to Handel’s 1732 musical setting. Yseult Martinez (Centre Roland Mousnier, Sorbonne Université) concluded the day’s presentations with an analysis of Ann Ford’s inclusion of two Handel arias—“Return, O God of hosts” from Samson and “O Liberty, thou choicest treasure” from Judas Maccabaeus—in her 1760 benefit concerts, and the symbolic import of those choices as they related to Ford’s own professional and personal life. An enlightening investigation of Thomas Gainsborough’s portrait of Ann Ford, painted that same year, offered compelling support for the paper’s conclusions.

As soon as the paper sessions ended for the day, attendees wound their way to the Handel Hendrix House for the (now almost obligatory) reception, hosted by Simon Daniels (director of the Handel Hendrix House) and a private viewing of the museum exhibits, accompanied by appropriately curated harpsichord performances from Bridget Cunningham. Beverages, ambiance, music, and conviviality combined, as always, in delightful rapport for the conference patrons and guests.

Sunday morning opened with a paper from John H. Roberts (University of California, Berkeley) informed by William Crotch’s 1831 list of external musical sources from which Handel borrowed, sometimes extensively. Roberts investigated a number of heretofore unidentified instances where Handel appears to have derived musical ideas and motifs directly from works by Antonio Cesti. Teresa Ramer-Wünsche (Martin-Luther-Universität Halle-Wittenberg) followed with another discussion of Handel’s sources, in this case the French textual, choreographic, and cultural models from which Handel drew liberally for his 1734 prologue Terpsicore.

In a session focused on Handel’s collaborators, Nicoleta Paraschivescu (Musik-Akademie Basel) presented her research on the Bolognese harpsichordist Pier Giuseppe Sandoni, whose performance collaborations and other interactions with Handel were important contributions to Handel’s activities in 1720s London. Andrew V. Jones (University of Cambridge and Selwyn College) then explored a hypothesis for why a collection of three Handel arias were mistakenly titled “cantata” by two otherwise-reliable copyists, and what that might reveal about Handel’s relationship with Elizabeth Legh, the first “collector” of his music.

The Italian librettist Paolo Rolli—already alluded to in Carrie Churnside’s paper the previous day—became the focus of the Sunday afternoon session. Reinhard Strohm (University of Oxford) and Bridget Cunningham (Open University) presented fascinating comparisons between how Handel and his operatic rival in London, Nicola Porpora (who worked with Rolli as a librettist during this period), approached the same classical mythological subjects in their rival operas. Strohm investigated the text-music relationships in the Rolli/Porpora operas, and Cunningham (assisted by musicians from London Early Opera) demonstrated Handel’s innovative approaches to form, key, and text-setting for superstar castrati (including Farinelli and Senesino) who performed Porpora’s operas for the Opera of the Nobility.

The conference’s final session focused on Handel’s oratorios. Kenneth Nott (University of Hartford, Connecticut) proposed a renegotiation of the prevailing opinions about Handel’s late style, suggesting that the composer’s blindness (and its impact on the late additions to The Triumph of Time and Solomon) should not automatically be considered a disability but rather a new context that informs, perhaps even enhances, these late additions. Jack Comerford (University of Southampton) surveyed the role of Handel’s music—especially selections from the late oratorios—in the domestic music-making activities in and around Bath. Luke Howard (Brigham Young University, Utah) concluded the conference with a case study drawn of contemporary Messiah adaptations, treating the 1992 recording of Handel’s Messiah: A Soulful Celebration as an interpretive lens through which the original, essential, and defining features of that oratorio can be identified.

At the end of this thoroughly delightful and informative conference, Donald Burrows wrapped up the proceedings with his customary concision and humor. All those who were involved in the organization and running of the Fourteenth Handel Institute Conference—the conference committee, local arrangements, suppliers of the tea and snacks and buffet lunches, audio-visual setup assistants, session chairs, the staff at Bridewell Hall, etc.—are deserving of gratitude and fervent praise. This conference was another iteration of the very best of scholarly engagement and enthusiastic encouragement for Handel studies worldwide. Attendees left the conference intellectually refreshed, invigorated, and spurred onward to continued excellence by this supportive community of scholars.

days of packing 900 people in (the current limit is 120), and there is no pit. But the building is friendly and the theater's size gives a lovely intimacy; vision is uniformly good and the acoustics are perfect. The orchestra joined the cast on the stage, which, although reducing the space available for action, added to the intimacy. The stage direction made a virtue of this by including some interplay between singers and instrumentalists (including an amusing double bass comment in an aria). And it should be remembered that audiences like seeing the orchestra, especially when there are not one but two theorbos. In any case, there is not much action in Imeneo, and not, therefore, much call for a huge stage.

Imeneo (1740) was Handel's penultimate opera. It first appeared on the English stage as Porpora's La Festa d'Imeneo, pipping Handel's Atalanta to the post as the celebration of the royal wedding in 1736 (elegantly explained in Ruth Smith's program note). In order not to be caught out again, Handel took Porpora's score, drafted his own in September 1738 and put it on his back burner, stirring it occasionally over the next couple of years. At this point he was writing Saul, and music seeps from one to the other both by design and by accident. He would start Messiah shortly after, and Samson after that, and both have echoes of Imeneo. The operetta (as Handel billed it) is of relatively short duration, which is just as well, for it is completely short of plot. Just over two hours are spent with one woman's indecision: will Rosmene marry her true love, Tirinto, or the man who saved her life, Imeneo? Will she be guided by her heart or her head? Porpora's version makes this obvious, and Rosmene cheerfully ditches Tirinto in favor of Imeneo. But Handel's music keeps an ambivalence even in the final chorus, in E minor, the same key as the shell-shocked end of Tamerlano.

The stage director Guido Martin-Brandis allowed Rosmene to fall in love with Imeneo towards the end, arguing in his program note that this was supported by hints in the music. I must admit to finding no such hints, but it is a cogent point of view, and a stage director working from the music is a rare thing in Handel opera and to be treasured. Not for him a capricious change of ending or gratuitous wall-clinging or mid-air bicycles. The failure of Tirinto to get his love was cleverly suggested by Martin-Brandis at the beginning by Tirinto's lack of devotion to Ceres in a votive dance because of his pining for Rosmene: this was one of many subtleties throughout the production. Martin-Brandis's interpretation did allow ambiguity to survive and the ending to be, as Handel's music suggests, unsettled. His staging, too, encouraged comedy, but not at the expense of any of the characters or their music. Indeed, he and the music director Julian Perkins replaced a cheery aria for Clomiri with a more somber one from a later revival to give her less comedy and more gravitas: a teenager with the hots for Imeneo, her disappointment is inevitable, but her feelings should not be dismissed because of her youth.

The set was an eighteenth-century garden, with a statue of Ceres (to whom prayers are offered for the safe return of abducted maidens is a focal point of the backstory) and a couple of picture frames: these somewhat surreal additions soon became normal through witty use of them at various points as portraits of Cupid (played by Huatai Cui) or the two suitors, and so on. The costumes were well thought out, with the suitors' hats—white for Tirinto and black for Imeneo—becoming proxies for the suitors themselves. (Imeneo was slightly let down by a pair of lamentable rubber boots, but that is a minor fault.) The lighting was subtle but interesting, highlighting the characters as portraits or reflecting the characters' moods, including lightning flashes to give extra foreboding to Tirinto's "Pieno il core" in act 3.

At nearly ten minutes long, this aria is by far the longest of the opera. Indeed, despite the name, it is Tirinto who is the primo uomo: he starts the opera, and in this production, whose three acts became two halves, he also ended the first half. Bethany Horak-Hallett's rendition was such that directors should be falling over themselves to have her for Cesare or Orlando or Ariodante. She makes a solid case for the use of mezzo sopranos for Handel's castrato parts. The rest of the cast was also strong. Soprano Ellie Neate's supple voice combined comedy, pathos, and poise for Rosmene, and baritone Timothy Nelson as Imeneo had the right amount of anguish and cockiness; his sneering at Tirinto was a delight. Soprano Lisa Dafydd's singing captured Clomiri's innocence and warmth well, and her facial acting was a joy. As Argenio, bass Trevor Eliot Bowes's Hugh Laurie looks were matched by a knack for comedy: his "Sull'arena di barbara scena" in act 2 (the "lion song" that was such a favorite among Handel's friends) rightly raised a laugh. The soloists also worked well as an ensemble, important for such an intimate opera. My only cause for complaint was the usual insistence by singers on not ornamenting the da capos so much as re-writing the music. I have not yet found a singer who is as good a composer as Handel. If Handel goes down, he means to go down; why someone should think that reversing the direction is a suitable "ornament" is beyond me. (A case in point was Clomiri, who did just that, despite having a downward echo in the violins.) This malaise is all too endemic and needs challenging with a good dose of rhetoric.

The cast was joined by a chorus in the gallery, which was more of a curate's egg: the women were good. The band was in general lovely, although the upper strings' tuning was at times less than accurate and the ensemble was occasionally out of focus. However, their balance and vibrancy were excellent; Perkins's tempi were considered and tasteful, and he brought out a great deal of nice phrasing and color. A final sentence must go to the program, a collection of well-written, unpretentious, and informative essays on the theater and the opera. In all, CHOC's Imeneo was a real treat, and it is to be hoped that at least some of the cast and crew will work on another Handel opera soon.

UPCOMING EVENTS

HANDEL ARIA COMPETITION

Friday, August 7, 2026, 7:30 pm
Grace Episcopal Church
Madison, Wisconsin
www.HandelAriaCompetition.org

2027 AMERICAN HANDEL SOCIETY CONFERENCE

March 18–21, 2027
Princeton University
Princeton, New Jersey
<https://www.americanhandelsociety.org/events>

2026 J. MERRILL KNAPP RESEARCH FELLOWSHIP WINNER

The winner of the Knapp Fellowship for 2026 is José Luis Segura Maldonado.

Segura Maldonado is a Ph.D. candidate in Musicology at the Universidad Nacional Autónoma de México (UNAM). His dissertation centers on the study, critical edition, and performance of guitar music from Mexican manuscripts preserved at the Suro Library in San Francisco. He also serves as a full-time professor of guitar and chamber music at UNAM.

With support from the Knapp Fellowship, Segura

Maldonado will publish an edition of two guitar transcriptions of Handel's variation music—one made by Ramón Noble (Mexico, 1920–1999) and another by Mauro Giuliani (Italy, 1781–1829). He will also perform both transcriptions and produce a performance video to make the project's results widely accessible for educational use. His project will deepen our understanding of Handel's reception and reinvention across time and place by tracing the composer's musical afterlives through guitar adaptations.

Ileri E. Chávez-Bárceñas, Chair

THE FOUNDING OF THE INTERNATIONAL HANDEL SOCIETY IN FLORENCE

In June 2026, a new Handel Society will be founded in Florence. Its mission is to cultivate Handel's legacy, promote his music to a wider audience, and enrich the music scene. The society aims to recruit prominent figures and international renowned experts for its board and academic advisory council. The initiators are, amongst others:

- Federico Maria Sardelli, Florence; flautist, musicologist, conductor, and, as founder of the ensemble Modo Antiquo in 1984, a pioneer of the early music movement in Italy.
- Bettina Hoffmann, Florence; gambist, professor at the music schools of Vicenza and Fiesole, musicologist, publicist, and co-director of the ensemble Modo Antiquo.
- Anna Maria Meo, Florence; director of the Fiesole Music School, cultural manager.
- Dr. Eleonora Negri, Florence; musicologist and publicist.

The newly founded Handel Society is planning, as part of a Handel project, a Florence Handel Festival, which will launch with a concert in June 2026 and continue into 2027 and 2028.

HALLISCHE HÄNDEL-AUSGABE PUBLISHES 100TH VOLUME

The Hallische Händel-Ausgabe has reached a major milestone with the publication of its 100th volume, marking a significant step toward completing the critical edition of all the works by Handel. Since the publication of the first volume in 1955, the editorial board—comprising Handel scholars from Germany, Great Britain, and the United States—has collaborated on this monumental project which is scheduled for completion in 2031. The Georg Friedrich Händel Gesellschaft and the Händel-Haus in Halle (Saale) organized a public event on February 23, 2026, Handel's 341st birthday, to celebrate this achievement and to acknowledge the contribution of the HHA to research and performance.

Photo by Hendrik Wilken.

HANDEL ARIA COMPETITION

This year's Handel Aria Competition will take place on Friday, August 7, 2026, at 7:30 pm in the historic Grace Episcopal Church on the capitol square in Madison, Wisconsin. Tickets will go on sale in July. The Madison Bach Musicians will accompany the singers on period instruments in the final round. This year, for the first time, the competition will be live-streamed internationally for free.

The winners of the 2025 competition are tenor Trevor Scott (first prize), tenor Morgan Mastrangelo (second prize and audience favorite), and baritone Jeremy Weiss (third prize).

Left to right: Morgan Mastrangelo, Trevor Scott, and Jeremy Weiss. Photo by Lewis Photography.

CALL FOR PAPERS: 2027 AMERICAN HANDEL SOCIETY CONFERENCE, PRINCETON, NEW JERSEY

Photo by Ken Lund,
<https://www.flickr.com/photos/kenlund/40545844173>

The biennial conference of the American Handel Society will take place March 18–21, 2027, in Princeton, New Jersey, hosted by the Princeton University Department of Music. Wendy Heller, who will serve as our host, is planning an exciting program of concerts and other events to supplement the paper sessions and Howard Serwer Memorial Lecture, including an event in collaboration with the brand-new Princeton University Art Museum.

The Society invites submission of abstracts for papers on any topic connected with Handel's life, his music, his close contemporaries, or the contexts in which his music was composed and/or performed. Given the collaboration with the new Princeton museum, the Program Committee would this year especially be interested in topics that consider the relationship of Handel's life and music to the visual arts. The Committee also notes that 2027 marks the three hundredth anniversary of Handel's naturalization as a British citizen, George II's coronation, and the premieres of Riccardo Primo (intended as a coronation opera) and Admeto. Abstracts of up to 500 words may be sent to Roger Freitas (rfreitas@esm.rochester.edu) by October 2, 2026. For further updates on the conference, see <https://www.americanhandelsociety.org/events>.

HANDEL AUTOGRAPHS AT THE BRITISH LIBRARY

Some digitized Handel manuscripts are now back up online. See British Library Archives and Manuscripts Catalogue, <https://searcharchives.bl.uk>.

2025 CIRCLE MEMBERS AND DONORS

Messiah Circle $500 (Lifetime)

Abbott, Graham
Beeks, Graydon
Eklund, Peter
Farbstein, Janet
Fehleisen, Fred
Gudger, William
Harris, Ellen T.
Heller, Wendy
Hunter, David
Kaplan, Michael
Kelly, Marjorie Pomeroy
Ketterer, Robert
Link, Nathan
McGegan, Nicholas
Ronish, Marty
Rosand, Ellen
Traver, Mary
Van der Water, Paul

Theodora Circle $250

Cleopatra Circle $125
Nissenbaum, Stephen

Rinaldo Circle $75
Smith, Ayana

Donors

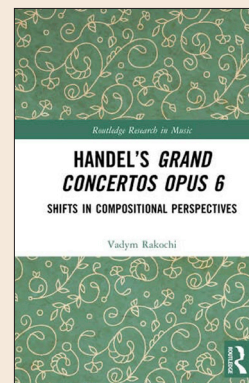

Beeks, Graydon
Freitas, Roger Freudenthal, Nancy
Harris, Ellen
Ketterer, Robert
Risinger, Mark
Solomon, Steven
Snead, David
Traver, Mary

NEW BOOK

Vadym Rakochi's Handel's Grand Concertos Opus 6: Shifts in Compositional Perspectives (New York, NY: Routledge, 2026) offers a deep analysis of Handel's Twelve Grand Concertos, Op. 6, a part of Handel's repertoire which has remained relatively understudied. Bringing together an analytical approach to the concertos with their historical context, the author shows how studying these concertos offers new insights into Handel's innovative and deeply individual compositional techniques, reframing our modern understanding of Handel as a composer. Refocusing scholarly attention on the crucial role of the orchestra, this book demonstrates how Handel utilized a unique compositional strategy that involved juxtaposing and fusing elements of different concerto types, including the grosso, ripieno, solo, and hybrid concerto. Revealing the remarkable consistency and creative deployment of the multilayered interconnections between concerto types in these works, this study shows that they represent a novel development in the history of the concerto genre. Shedding new light on Handel's Grand Concertos, on Handel as a composer, and the history of the concerto, this book is relevant to Handel scholars, musicologists, music theorists, and all those with a serious interest in Handel and eighteenth-century music.

<https://www.routledge.com/Handels-Grand-Concertos-Opus-6-Shifts-in-Compositional-Perspectives/Rakochi/p/book/9781032983486>.

RECENT PUBLICATIONS

Aspden, Suzanne. Book Review: “A Poetics of Handel’s Operas by Nathan Link. Oxford: Oxford University Press. 2023.” Journal for Eighteenth-Century Studies (2026), <https://doi.org/10.1111/1754-0208.70043>.

Bendall, Sarah A. “Queen Anne’s Wardrobe: Fashion, Sartorial Politics, and the Representational Strategies of the Last Stuart Queen.” Journal for Eighteenth-Century Studies (2026), <https://doi.org/10.1111/1754-0208.70029>.

Händel, Georg Friedrich. Peace Anthem und Foundling Hospital Anthem, ed. Stephan Blaut. Hallische Händel-Ausgabe, ser. 3, vol. 14. Kassel: Bärenreiter, 2025.

Kim, Minji. “Hope in the Face of Adversity: Paradox in the Sunrise Arias of Handel’s Samson and Theodora.” Journal of Musicology 43, no. 2 (2026): 184–219, <https://doi.org/10.1525/jm.2026.43.2.184>.

Kim, Minji. “‘Make poor Saul stark mad’: Sonic Effect of Bells in Handel’s Saul.” Journal of Musicological Research 44, no. 4 (2025): 279–298, <https://doi.org/10.1080/01411896.2026.2634908>.

Murphy, Estelle. “Variations of Druid Tunes: Matthew Dubourg as Song Collector.” Early Music (2026), caaf062, <https://doi.org/10.1093/em/caaf062>.

Talbot, Michael. “Cultures of Power: Mediating Ottoman-British Relations in the Eighteenth Century.” Göttinger Händel-Beiträge 27 (2026): 63–82, <https://doi.org/10.13109/9783666278419.63>.

FROM THE PRESIDENT’S DESK

I would like to congratulate José Luis Segura Maldonado, the recipient of the 2026 J. Merrill Knapp Research Fellowship. His project is described elsewhere in this issue of the Newsletter. I would also like to thank the members of the committee, which consisted of Ileri Chávez-Bárcenas (Chair), Mark Risinger, and Erica Levenson, for their conscientious deliberations. The Knapp Fellowship is offered every other year by the AHS to encourage research in the field of Handel and related studies by younger scholars. Recipients are listed on the AHS website.

Also in this issue of the Newsletter, please note the Call for Papers for the next American Handel Society Conference to be held at Princeton University on March 18–21, 2027. The Program Committee, chaired by Roger Freitas, hopes to receive a record number of proposals. Wendy Heller, who will again serve as our host, is planning an exciting program of concerts and other events, including one in collaboration with the brand-new Princeton University Art Museum, to supplement the paper sessions. She will also be reserving a block of hotel rooms for conference attendees. Details concerning the program, housing, and registration will be available on the AHS website and in future issues of the Newsletter, but please put the dates on your calendar now and plan to attend what promises to be a splendid event.

Finally, I would like to thank everyone who has made donations to the Society in recent months. In these politically and financially unsettling times, when we are all being stretched in many directions to an unprecedented degree, it is encouraging to see that our members and friends continue to value the work of the AHS in supporting the performance of and scholarship pertaining to Handel’s music. I hope for your continued support in the years to come.

— Graydon Beeks

American Handel Society

Telephone: (909) 607-3568 Email: americanhandelsociety@gmail.com
<https://www.americanhandelsociety.org>

OFFICERS AND DIRECTORS

Graydon Beeks, President, Pomona College
Nathan Link, Vice President, Centre College
Minji Kim, Newsletter Editor/Secretary, Andover, MA

Ileri E. Chávez-Bárcenas, Bowdoin College
Norbert Dubowy, Mozarteum, Salzburg
Fredric Fehleisen, The Juilliard School
Roger Freitas, Eastman School of Music
William D. Gudger, Honorary Director, The College of Charleston
Ellen T. Harris, Honorary Director, Massachusetts Institute of Technology
Wendy Heller, Princeton University
David Hurley, Honorary Director, Pittsburg State University, Kansas

Regina Compton, Web Designer, Sarasota, FL
Marjorie Pomeroy Kelly, Treasurer, Sandwich, MA

Robert Ketterer, University of Iowa
Richard G. King, Honorary Director, University of Maryland
Nicholas McGegan, Honorary Director, Berkeley, CA
Kenneth Nott, Hartt School of Music
Mark Risinger, New York, NY
John Roberts, University of California, Berkeley
Marty Ronish, Honorary Director, Edmonds, WA
Ellen Rosand, Honorary Director, Yale University
Ayana Smith, Indiana University Bloomington

AMERICAN HANDEL SOCIETY — MEMBERSHIP FORM

Please mail the completed form and appropriate membership dues as instructed below:

Name _____ Date _____

Address _____

City _____ State/Country _____ Postal code _____

E-mail address _____ Phone _____

I agree to have the following listed in the Directory of AHS Members (check as appropriate): ☐ Address ☐ Phone ☐ Email

Donors and members of Rinaldo, Cleopatra, Theodora, and Messiah Circles — I consent to publishing my name on the AHS newsletter and website:

☐ Yes ☐ No ☐ Anonymous

I would like my copy of the Newsletter delivered: ☐ electronically ☐ by mail

Class of Membership — Circle applicable cell(s) (for current calendar year, unless otherwise specified)	$	£	€
Regular	40	30	35
Joint (one set of publications)	50	38	44
Student or Retired	20	15	18
Rinaldo Circle	75	55	66
Cleopatra Circle	125	95	110
Theodora Circle	250	190	220
Messiah Circle (Lifetime membership)	500	400	450
Subscriber (Institutions Only)	48	36	42
Donation – Travel Grant, Serwer Lecture, Knapp Fellowship, Traver Concert, ongoing activities (please specify intent)
Friends of the Handel Institute, London*
Regular	30	20	-
Student	15	10	-
Membership in the Georg-Friedrich-Händel-Gesellschaft*
Regular	45	-	40
Student*	20	-	15
Dual Membership – Georg-Friedrich-Händel-Gesellschaft / Göttinger-Händel-Gesellschaft*†
Regular	75	-	65
Regular (with Göttinger Händel Beiträge)	115	-	95
Student	27	-	21
Student (with Göttinger Händel Beiträge)	56	-	46
Dual Membership – Georg-Friedrich-Händel-Gesellschaft / Händel-Gesellschaft Karlsruhe*
Regular	63	-	55
Student*	23	-	17.5
Triple Membership – Georg-Friedrich-Händel-Gesellschaft / Göttinger-Händel-Gesellschaft / Händel-Gesellschaft Karlsruhe
Regular	93	-	80
Regular (with Göttinger Händel Beiträge)	125	-	105
Student	30	-	24
Student (with Göttinger Händel Beiträge)	60	-	48.5
TOTAL REMITTANCE

* This organization does not have a reduced rate for retirees.

† This organization has additional categories of Regular Membership that require a higher membership fee but provide additional benefits (see its website). Arrangements for these other categories may be made directly with Mrs. Pomeroy Kelly (see below).

Those paying in dollars should make their checks payable to AMERICAN HANDEL SOCIETY and mail them to Marjorie Pomeroy Kelly, Treasurer, AMERICAN HANDEL SOCIETY, 49 Christopher Hollow Road, Sandwich, MA 02563. Those wishing to pay in Euros should remit to Stephan Blaut, Treasurer, Georg-Friedrich-Händel-Gesellschaft, Gr. Nikolaistrasse 5, 06108 Halle (Saale), Federal Republic of Germany, and indicate that the payment is for the account of the AHS. Friends of the Handel Institute, London may also pay their AHS dues in sterling by making their checks payable to THE HANDEL INSTITUTE and mailing them to Ms. Sylvia Levi, Hon. Treasurer, The Handel Institute, 254A Kew Road, Richmond TW9 3EG, United Kingdom, with the appropriate annotation. Please do not send checks in Euros or sterling directly to the AHS as we are no longer able to process them.

Online payment options are available at <https://www.americanhandelsociety.org/join/>

Payments in dollars for GFH or HI memberships must be received before May 15.

American Handel Society

100 Brookside Drive Unit B
Andover, MA 01810

ISSN 0888-8701
xli/1