

NEWSLETTER of the American Handel Society

Volume XLI, Number 2

Summer 2026

RODELINDA IN SANTA FE

Graydon Beeks

Lucy Crowe (Rodelinda). Photo by Bronwen Sharp.

The Santa Fe Opera included five performances of Handel's Rodelinda in this year's season, and I saw the second on July 29, 2026. Musically, it was very successful. Soprano Lucy Crowe was spellbinding as Rodelinda, convincingly ringing the dramatic changes from sorrow to defiance, from desperation to rejoicing. In a role written for Cuzzoni, her technical command was absolute, and her high notes were especially impressive. During the first two acts I felt her mid-range was somewhat clouded and her diction unclear, but all this went away in the third act. Countertenor Iestyn Davies as Bertarido was masterful in the slow, lamenting arias that Senesino, for whom the role was written, was so renowned for, and his prison scene in act 3 was very moving. If his voice lacked the edge needed to sing his closing bravura aria, "Vivi, tiranno," most effectively, it was a minor flaw.

The English tenor Anthony Gregory sang musically and acted effectively, although I thought he was somewhat miscast

continued on p. 2

THE ENGLISH CONCERT PERFORMS HANDEL'S HERCULES AT CARNEGIE HALL, MARCH 15, 2026

Fred Fehleisen

Earlier this year, Harry Bicket led The English Concert, The Clarion Choir, and fantastic team of soloists in a performance of Handel's Hercules at Carnegie Hall. What follows is less a review of that concert than a series of personal reflections on the performance and the work. My impressions of the concert were to an extent informed by The English Concert's performance of Giulio Cesare given the year before in May 2025. Both performances were excellent and well received by full (almost packed) houses. After hearing the performance of Giulio Cesare, my mind kept dwelling on the idea that there was something incredibly coherent about its complex and varied design.

The same thing happened to me again after Hercules. There was nothing accidental about this work, and its language was filled with riches worth exploring in greater detail. Not knowing Hercules very well, I brought a copy of the libretto with me in order to take notes on things that struck me about Handel's musical settings. The audience was able to follow the plot through supertitles projected on a screen above the stage. These were expertly done and smoothed out the transformation of Handel's original three-act design into a two-part performance with one intermission. The first half ended most effectively with Handel's famous "Jealousy" chorus, and the second half continued from there. This "musical drama," unlike Messiah, works well in two parts, dramatically and musically.

So varied were the movement-to-movement stylistic and affective changes that I soon found it difficult to make note of them all. Like Giulio Cesare, the musical language of Hercules becomes more intense as the work unfolds. I continue to marvel at the fact that Handel composed Hercules in just thirty days! (He began the work on July 19, 1744, and finished it on August 17, 1744.)

continued on p. 3

IN THIS ISSUE

Rodelinda in Santa Fe – Graydon Beeks
The English Concert Performs Handel's Hercules – Fred Fehleisen
From the President's Desk – Graydon Beeks
Report From Halle – Graydon Beeks
International Scholarly Conference Halle (Saale), Germany
Call for Papers: 2027 American Handel Society Conference
International Handel Research Prize 2027
Recent Publications & Upcoming Events

as the ambivalent tyrant Grimoaldo. Handel wrote the part for Borosini, one of the few leading tenors in the world of Italian opera at the time. He was famous for his dramatic portrayals of conflicted characters, and one suspects he had a somewhat heavier voice than Gregory's Mozartian instrument. He was not helped by the staging, which failed to allow him to retain a vestige of his dignity at the end. In an ideal performance of the opera, Grimoaldo should carry the same dramatic and musical weight as Rodelinda and Bertarido, but this was not the case here. Instead, the third dominant figure was the true villain Garibaldo, sung by William Guanbo Su with a resounding bass voice and a commanding stage presence. Mezzo-soprano Meridian Prall was impressive as Bertarido's sister Eduige, whose love for and subsequent rejection by Grimoaldo help propel the plot. The role of Bertarido's ever-faithful friend Unulfo was sung by Hugh Cutting whose light tenor was both musically appealing and dramatically appropriate.

The Santa Fe Opera Orchestra, using modern instruments in historically appropriate style, played consistently well under the direction of Harry Bicket. A few tempi seemed on the slow side, but I attributed that to the challenge of performing in a large, outdoor space. The coordination between the stage and the pit was exemplary.

In the matter of staging, things were less successful. The director, R. B. Schlather, described his concept as a "noir melodrama gangster story." He explained that

The climactic mercy after so much brutality and malevolence is astonishing to me. It felt to me like something out of a theatrical Victorian melodrama, but with the overpowering suspense and tension of a noir thriller. Therefore, we created a production that suggests an aristocratic 19th century home, but in a stylized, unrealistic way. It is a psychological environment where ruthless power struggles for control after the death of the king could happen.

The "noir" aspect was represented by the lack of color onstage and by the characters casting unrealistically large shadows. The costumes were pseudo-Victorian, while the action was played out indoors in a single room with spartan furnishings and bare walls, and outdoors against black walls. The setting was meant to depict a dysfunctional family interacting in the family home, but it was not clear to me that this aided the audience in understanding the plot.

Fortunately, the basic story being told was essentially that of the opera libretto, so the incongruities seldom got in the way. There were often people onstage who should not have been, but they generally did not upstage the principal characters, with the notable exception of Garibaldo who took a very long time wandering around upstage before dying. The opera was played in two parts, with the first two acts run together. This made for a very long first part but correctly placed the interval after the great duet for Rodelinda and Bertarido that ends act 2. If a Handel opera cannot be played in three acts with two intermissions as originally designed, this is probably a better solution than placing an intermission in the middle of act 2. There were, of course, some cuts in this first part, but they were confined to shortening recitatives and eliminating entire arias instead of cutting the da capos of arias. Act 3, which is the shortest one, was played mostly complete.

Attending a performance at the Santa Fe Opera is always a rewarding experience. The location of the opera house is striking, and the performance and technical standards are consistently high. In addition, between museums, art galleries, restaurants, historic buildings, and natural wonders, there is so much to see and do in the city and its surroundings. If this staging of Rodelinda did not offer any new insights, the musical and dramatic executions were world class. I, for one, eagerly await the next production of a Handel opera.

FROM THE PRESIDENT'S DESK

As summer 2026 draws to a close, American Handel Society members, along with much of the rest of the world, will be looking forward to relief from unusually hot weather. There are fewer specially Handel-related events between now and the end of the year, although the Handel & Haydn Society will begin its 2026/27 season with performances of L'Allegro, il Penseroso ed il Moderato in October and Messiah at the end of November. For those looking to combine a visit to England with a conference, the 42nd Annual Conference on Music in 18th-Century Britain will take place on Friday, November 27, 2026 at the Foundling Museum, London.

For those looking forward to 2027, please take note of the dates for the next AHS Conference, which will take place at Princeton University in March. The Call for Papers appears elsewhere in this number of the Newsletter and the deadline for submitting proposals is October 2, 2026. Likewise, the Call for Papers for the International Scholarly Conference held in connection with the Handel Festival in Halle (Saale), Germany, June 7–9, 2027, is also printed in this issue, and the deadline for submission of proposals is October 31, 2026.

Finally, as always, I would like to remind any members who have not paid their membership dues for 2026—or any potential new members—that it is still possible to do so either online through the AHS website or by submitting the completed membership form. Please remember that dues and gifts to the Society are the primary sources of support for its activities, and all will be gratefully acknowledged.

— Graydon Beeks

THE 13TH ANNUAL HANDEL ARIA COMPETITION WINNERS

Photo by Lewis Photography.

First prize: Andréa Walker, soprano
Second prize: Fran Daniel Laucerica, tenor
Third prize & Audience Favorite: Katherine Lerner Lee, mezzo-soprano

The role of Hercules was sung by bass-baritone William Guanbo Su. Mezzo-soprano Ann Hallenberg took on the role of his wife, Dejanira. Soprano Hilary Cronin sang the role of Iole, the captive princess. Hercules's son Hyllus was portrayed by tenor David Portillo. Countertenor Alexander Chance sang the part of the herald Lichas (a role originally created in part for Susannah Cibber). Basses Jonathan Woody and Craig Phillips (members of The Clarion Choir) sang the Priest of Jupiter and the First Trachinian, respectively. Everyone in the cast sang splendidly, but here are a few high points: Cronin (Iole) made her presence known early on in act 2 with a dazzling run through of "Ah, think what ills the jealous prove!" Shortly after, Chance (Lichas) flew through the coloratura of "As stars, that rise and disappear," matched with grace and precision by the unison violins, cellos, and the double bass. (Handel seems to have been in a flow state when he was drafting this aria: In the autograph score, there are two pages written down so fast that the ink on both pages smudged the opposite page after he continued onto the next movement!) In act 3 Hallenberg (Dejanira) enthralled us in the concitato accompanied recitative and aria, "Where shall I fly?" Singing this enormous piece, which is filled with guilt, "snaky whips," and "furies of the mind," after more than two hours into the performance, was an amazing feat in itself.

The Clarion Choir (Stephen Fox, artistic director) was virtuosic in every sense of the word. Their performance was spectacular throughout. Where the chorus made their first direct hit on the audience was at the end of the first half of the concert in their rendition of "Jealousy! Infernal pest, Tyrant of the human breast!" It's hard to put into words just how piercingly effective Handel's setting of the word "pest" is, but everyone was stung by its first utterance. From that moment on, the chorus had our full attention and we relished it all.

The English Concert band now has fifty-five years of experience performing Handel and the ensemble does not disappoint. Its members strive to bring audiences performances that are affectively rich and thrillingly precise. They play right on the edge and seemingly love to take risks. Much of what makes Handel's music so interesting and varied has to do with the bass lines and inner voices he created in order to express a wide range of characters, styles, and emotional states. The English Concert continuo team—Harry Bicket (harpsichord), Tom Foster (harpsichord/organ), Sergio Bucheli (theorbo), Jonathan Byers (cello), and Giuseppe Ciraso (double bass)—masterfully carried the audience's attention through the course of this long and varied music drama. They demonstrated that they are among the best continuo teams in the business. Each of Handel's striking changes of affect and character were woven by them into the tonal scheme and larger design of each act.

Two further items are worth mentioning here: Sergio Bucheli's subtle and highly dramatic performance on the theorbo, and Tom Foster's contribution on the second harpsichord and the digital organ. Rather than using a portable positive organ tuned to baroque pitch, as is often done in concert halls these days, The English Concert chose to employ a synthesizer keyboard (framed in a wooden shell and set on top of the second harpsichord). Its color and sonic support of the chorus and the band was as good as anything I've heard recently in a hall. It worked!

One of the joys of attending the performance of Hercules in Carnegie Hall was watching and listening to a band that included instrumentalists taking part in "The English Concert in America Fellowship" program. These young professionals—recent graduates from American conservatories who themselves hail from various parts of the world—have been provided with the opportunity to work alongside many of the finest period players in the world. Each performance becomes a learning experience for everyone in the ensemble, and the sound is young and vibrant.

Having attended The English Concert's convincing performances of Giulio Cesare and Hercules at Carnegie Hall in 2025 and 2026 and knowing more about the educational opportunities they are giving young musicians, let me just say that I can't wait for their performance of Handel's Alessandro on May 2, 2027. I hope to see you there!

INTERNATIONAL HANDEL RESEARCH PRIZE 2027

In 2027 the George Frideric Handel Society will award its International Handel Research Prize for the eighth time to a young scholar who has completed a research project on the life or work of George Frideric Handel and has presented the results in a formal research document. Research teams also may apply.

The International Handel Research Prize is sponsored by the Foundation of the Saalesparkasse. It is valued at €2000 and entails the presentation of a paper to be read by the prize winner at the scholarly conference to be held during the annual Handel Festival in Halle an der Saale on June 7, 2027. Applications may be submitted by graduates of musicology or related disciplines who have completed their Master's or Doctoral studies (or equivalent research) between 2024 and 2026. Historical-critical editions may also be submitted for the prize. Studies in English or German are accepted.

Applications for the International Handel Research Prize should be sent by January 31, 2027 (postmark), to:

Georg-Friedrich-Händel-Gesellschaft e.V.
Geschäftsstelle
Grosse Nikolaistraße 5
06108 Halle (Saale)
GERMANY

The application must include the scholarly work undertaken (in printed and in electronic form) and be accompanied by a brief curriculum vitae and an account of the applicant's career. Reports can be enclosed.

The prize winner will be selected by a panel from the Foundation of the Saalesparkasse and the George Frideric Handel Society. The prize will be presented in Halle in June 2027, during the scholarly conference of the Halle Handel Festival.

REPORT FROM HALLE 2026

Graydon Beeks

The annual Handel Festival in Halle, Germany took place this year from June 5–14, returning to a more compact format. Unfortunately, I contracted a very heavy cold and felt I should not inflict my coughing on fellow audience members. Hence, this shortened report, for which I apologize. The festival's theme was "Masculinities: Heroes, Rulers, Heartbreakers," and the opening opera was, appropriately, Rinaldo. The new staging, by Walter Sutcliffe, Intendant of the Halle Opera, was reportedly based on the premise of performers staging the opera. I look forward to seeing a repeat performance at next year's Festival.

I did manage to hear The Foundling Hospital Concert on Sunday morning, June 7, in the Freylinghausen-Saal of the Franckesche Stiftungen. This was a shortened version of the Benefit Concert given by Handel on May 27, 1749, in the newly completed Chapel of the Foundling Hospital. The highlights of the program were the Peace Anthem, first performed on April 17, 1749, to celebrate the Treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle ending the War of Austrian Succession, and the newly composed Foundling Hospital Anthem in its original all-choral version. There were also excerpts from the Music for the Royal Fireworks and the oratorio Solomon.

These were performed by the Choir of the Evangelische Hochschule für Kirchenmusik Halle, which is celebrating its 100th anniversary this year, and the Telemannisches Collegium Michaelstein, with contributions from soprano Isabel Schicketanz, altos Henriette Gödde and Florence Pettet, tenor Christopher Renz, and bass Jussi Juola, under the direction of Peter Kopp. The performances were not polished to the highest degree, but enthusiasm made up for a lot. It was a real pleasure to hear a choir sing the biblical words with such commitment. The concert celebrated the publication in 2025 of the two anthems edited by Stephan Blaut as the 100th volume of the Hallische Händel-Ausgabe, which is scheduled to be completed in 2031.

The other concert I managed to hear was a performance of L'Allegro, il Penseroso ed il Moderato on Monday, June 8, in the Dom. The Nova Era Vocal Ensemble and Divino Sospiro orchestra, both from Portugal, were directed by Massimo Mazzeo. The young singers and instrumentalists acquitted themselves well, with only occasional lapses in English pronunciation. The soloists generally sang stylishly, and if none of them stood out, it may be because I had to leave after part 1 and missed hearing some of the most striking and technically demanding arias. The tempi were, for the most part, well chosen, although the bass aria "Mirth, admit me of thy crew" was taken a little faster than was comfortable for the horn player, and (I am reliably informed) the great duet "As steals the morn" from Il Moderato, was simply too fast.

The program notes provided a clear introduction to the background of the work and its first performance on February 27, 1740, at Lincoln's Inn Fields Theatre in London. The version performed in Halle, however, corresponded more closely to that of March 18, 1743, which included most of the "Additional Songs" first inserted in January and February 1741 as well as seven items rewritten for the alto voice and sung by Mrs. Cibber. By that time, however, Il Moderato had been replaced by the Ode for St. Cecilia's Day as part 3. Nevertheless, it was good to hear both the alto versions and Il Moderato, and one was reminded again what glorious music the work contains.

Among the other performances that I was forced to miss were a set of three operas – Rinaldo, Giustino, and Ariodante—performed on consecutive days in the Goethe-Theater at Bad Lauchstädt by the Puppet Theater of Carlo Colla and Sons, with soloists and the lauten compagney BERLIN under the direction of Wolfgang Katschner; a concert performance of Ariodante by La Cetra Barockorchester Basel under the direction of Andrea Marcon with Magdalena Kožená in the title role; and a performance of Judas Maccabaeus by the Vocalensemble Rastatt and Les Favorites under the direction of Holger Speck. Before the Festival concluded with performances of Messiah, concerts featuring countertenors Valer Sabadus and Reginald Mobley, and the traditional Final Concert with fireworks, there was a performance of Acis, Galatea e Polifemo by the Kammerorchester Basel under the direction of René Jacobs, who is the recipient of this year's Handel Prize of the City of Halle.

René Jacobs, recipient of the Handel Prize of the City of Halle 2026.

Photo by Philippe Matsas.

The Festival Lecture on Saturday, June 6, was given by Prof. Dr. Kordula Knaus of the Technical University Dortmund. This was followed by a short concert presented by the first winners of the Klaus Froboese Youth Prize, awarded to talented and promising young musicians in honor of the Intendant of the Halle Opera from 1991 to 2008. Next came the annual Membership Meeting of the G. F. Händel Gesellschaft, during which I offered greetings from the American Handel Society and an invitation to attend our upcoming conference next March in Princeton.

This year's scholarly conference was organized around three topics. On Monday, June 8, the papers focused on the theme of "Constructions of Masculinity in Handel's Operas and Oratorios." The first session on Tuesday, June 9, presented the results of recent Handel scholarship, while the remaining sessions were concerned with the work of the nineteenth-century scholar and editor Friedrich Chrysander in honor of his 200th birthday. Members of the AHS giving papers included Donald Burrows on Handel's Edinburgh oratorio performances in the 1750s, Lawrence Zazzo on anti-heroic transformations in Handel's 1731 Rinaldo, Wolfgang Hirschmann on Chrysander's edition of Faramondo, Annette Landgraf on Chrysander's edition of Judas Maccabaeus, and myself on Handel's use of Cannons material in his Op.2 Trio Sonatas.

Next year's Handel Festival, on the theme of "Einsamkeit—I am myself alone," will take place June 4–13, 2027. Featured works will include Solomon, Belshazzar, and the Coronation Anthems. Tickets should be on sale beginning in late autumn 2026. The scholarly conference will be a three-day affair on June 7–9, 2027, and the Call for Papers is to be found elsewhere in this edition of the Newsletter.

CALL FOR PAPERS: 2027 AMERICAN HANDEL SOCIETY CONFERENCE, PRINCETON, NEW JERSEY

Photo by Ken Lund.

The biennial conference of the American Handel Society will take place March 18–21, 2027, in Princeton, New Jersey, hosted by the Princeton University Department of Music. Wendy Heller, who will serve as our host, is planning an exciting program of concerts and other events to supplement the paper sessions and Howard Serwer Memorial Lecture, including an event in collaboration with the brand-new Princeton University Art Museum.

The Society invites submission of abstracts for papers on any topic connected with Handel's life, his music, his close contemporaries, or the contexts in which his music was composed and/or performed. Given the collaboration with the new Princeton museum, the Program Committee would this year especially be interested in topics that consider the relationship of Handel's life and music to the visual arts. The Committee also notes that 2027 marks the three hundredth anniversary of Handel's naturalization as a British citizen, George II's coronation, and the premieres of Riccardo Primo (intended as a coronation opera) and Admeto. Abstracts of up to 500 words may be sent to Roger Freitas (rfreitas@esm.rochester.edu) by October 2, 2026. For further updates on the conference, see <https://www.americanhandelsociety.org/events>.

INTERNATIONAL SCHOLARLY CONFERENCE, HALLE (SAALE), GERMANY

"Future Perspectives of Handel Scholarship"
June 7–9, 2027

What directions should research on the life, works, and reception of George Frideric Handel (1685–1759) take in the coming decades? Which areas still require further research? What challenges arise from evolving conceptions of research in the humanities and cultural studies, including their methods, materials, and objectives in the 21st century? How do advances in research and media technologies in Digital Humanities and the field of Artificial Intelligence shape this process?

These and related questions shall form the focus of a deliberately broad-based conference. We welcome contributions presenting new insights into Handel research, but also especially papers that outline future research agendas or draw attention to urgent areas of needed research. The organizing institutions (see below) suggest several possible thematic areas, including:

- Handel in the context of Global Music History
- Handel in the Digital Realm
- Handel in Halle
- Handel Soundscapes

We invite scholars to participate in the conference by presenting a 20-minute paper in either English or German. The conference will be held, for the first time, in a hybrid format (via Zoom), enabling accessible participation for researchers and attendees worldwide. Papers should preferably be presented in person at the conference venue; in exceptional cases, virtual live presentations will be accepted.

Applications including a proposed topic, an abstract (max. 250 words), a short biography, and an indication of the preferred mode of participation (in person or fully digital presentation) should be submitted by October 31, 2026, to Dr. Annette Landgraf, landgraf@musik.uni-halle.de, and Prof. Dr. Wolfgang Hirschmann, wolfgang.hirschmann@musik.uni-halle.de.

The hotel booking for speakers will be arranged by the office of the Georg-Friedrich-Händel-Gesellschaft. Accommodation costs will be covered for a maximum of four nights in a single room. Travel expenses will not be reimbursed. To support the participation of early-career researchers, applications for travel grants may be submitted to Ulrike Harnisch, gesellschaft@haendel.de.

The annual Händel-Jahrbuch, published in both print and as an e-book, offers the opportunity to publish selected conference papers. The editors reserve the right to make the final selection and will invite authors to develop their contributions into publishable articles shortly after the conference. Completed contributions must be submitted by September 30, 2027, to Dr. Teresa Ramer-Wünsche, teresa.ramer-wuensche@musikwiss.uni-halle.de, and are scheduled for publication in the Händel-Jahrbuch in June 2028.

Organizers:

Georg-Friedrich-Händel-Gesellschaft e. V., Internationale Vereinigung; Stiftung Händel-Haus Halle;
Martin-Luther-Universität Halle-Wittenberg, Institut für Musik, Medien- und Sprechwissenschaften, Abteilung Musikwissenschaft

RECENT PUBLICATIONS

Händel-Jahrbuch 72 (2026)—select titles:

Beeks, Graydon. “Some Overtures to be plaid before the first lesson’: New Candidates,” 33–47.

Burrows, Donald. “Handel’s Performances at the Foundling Hospital,” 49–66.

Della Libera, Luca. “The Letters of Alessandro Melani to the Hanoverian Court,” 131–145.

Dellaborra, Mariateresa. “‘La poesia è spezie della musica’: The Case of Admeto re di Tessaglia (1727–1754),” 287–301.

Heller, Wendy. “From Aureli to Mauro to Brilliandi: Revisiting the Libretto for Handel’s Admeto,” 267–286.

Hurley, David Ross. “The Deceptive in Handel,” 305–325.

Lanzellotti, Federico. “‘O notte, o cara notte’: The Depiction of Night in Handel’s Italian Operas,” 227–247.

Martinez, Yseult. “Berenice, Regina d’Egitto: A Comparison Between Antonio Salvi’s Original Text (1709) and Handel’s Adaptation for the London Audience (1737),” 249–265.

Martinez, Yseult. “‘O Liberty, thou choicest Treasure’: Ann Ford Sings Handel, Spring 1760,” 327–338.

McCargar, Alexander. “Johann Oswald Harms and Handel’s ‘Lost’ Nero,” 339–366.

Pagnini, Caterina, and Gianluca Stefani. “Strategies of Adaptation in Handel’s Operas from the Libretto to the Performance,” 215–226.

Roberts, John H. “Mattheson, Handel, Brockes: Story of a Passion,” 67–83.

Strohm, Reinhard. “Handel Text Studies: First Draft of a New Research Programme,” 105–130.

Timms, Colin. “Handel’s Settings of Italian Verse: Arioso, Cavata and Cavatina,” 85–104.

UPCOMING EVENTS

2027 American Handel Society Conference
March 18–21, 2027
Princeton University, Princeton, New Jersey
<https://www.americanhandelsociety.org/events>

Handel Festival Halle 2027
“Einsamkeit—I Am Myself Alone”
June 4–13, 2027
Halle (Saale)
<https://haendelhaus.de/hfs/startseite>

International Scholarly Conference, Halle (Saale)
“Future Perspectives of Handel Scholarship”
June 7–9, 2027
<https://www.haendel.de/en/scholarly-handel-conference>

42nd Annual Conference on Music in 18th-Century Britain
November 27, 2026
Foundling Museum, London

American Handel Society

Telephone: (909) 607-3568 Email: americanhandelsociety@gmail.com
<https://www.americanhandelsociety.org>

OFFICERS AND DIRECTORS

Graydon Beeks, President, Pomona College
Nathan Link, Vice President, Centre College
Minji Kim, Newsletter Editor/Secretary, Andover, MA

Ileri E. Chávez-Bárceñas, Bowdoin College
Norbert Dubowy, Mozarteum, Salzburg
Fredric Fehleisen, The Juilliard School
Roger Freitas, Eastman School of Music
William D. Gudger, Honorary Director, The College of Charleston
Ellen T. Harris, Honorary Director, Massachusetts Institute of Technology
Wendy Heller, Princeton University
David Hurley, Honorary Director, Pittsburg State University, Kansas

Regina Compton, Web Designer, Sarasota, FL
Marjorie Pomeroy Kelly, Treasurer, Sandwich, MA

Robert Ketterer, University of Iowa
Richard G. King, Honorary Director, University of Maryland
Nicholas McGegan, Honorary Director, Berkeley, CA
Kenneth Nott, Hartt School of Music
Mark Risinger, New York, NY
John Roberts, University of California, Berkeley
Marty Ronish, Honorary Director, Edmonds, WA
Ellen Rosand, Honorary Director, Yale University
Ayana Smith, Indiana University Bloomington

AMERICAN HANDEL SOCIETY — MEMBERSHIP FORM

Note: Due January 1. Annual membership covers the calendar year January 1–December 31.

Name _____ Date _____

Address _____

City _____ State/Country _____ Postal code _____

E-mail address _____ Phone _____

I agree to have the following listed in the Directory of AHS Members (check as appropriate): ☐ Address ☐ Phone ☐ Email

Donors and members of Rinaldo, Cleopatra, Theodora, and Messiah Circles — I consent to publishing my name on the AHS newsletter and website:

☐ Yes ☐ No ☐ Anonymous

I would like my copy of the Newsletter delivered: ☐ electronically ☐ by mail

Class of Membership — Circle applicable cell(s) (for current calendar year, unless otherwise specified)	$	£	€
Regular	40	30	35
Joint (one set of publications)	50	38	44
Student or Retired	20	15	18
Rinaldo Circle	75	55	66
Cleopatra Circle	125	95	110
Theodora Circle	250	190	220
Messiah Circle (Lifetime membership)	500	400	450
Subscriber (Institutions Only)	48	36	42
Donation – Travel Grant, Serwer Lecture, Knapp Fellowship, Traver Concert, ongoing activities (please specify intent)
Friends of the Handel Institute, London*
Regular	30	20	-
Student	15	10	-
Membership in the Georg-Friedrich-Händel-Gesellschaft*
Regular	45	-	40
Student*	20	-	15
Dual Membership – Georg-Friedrich-Händel-Gesellschaft / Göttinger-Händel-Gesellschaft*†
Regular	75	-	65
Regular (with Göttinger Händel Beiträge)	115	-	95
Student	27	-	21
Student (with Göttinger Händel Beiträge)	56	-	46
Dual Membership – Georg-Friedrich-Händel-Gesellschaft / Händel-Gesellschaft Karlsruhe*
Regular	63	-	55
Student*	23	-	17.5
Triple Membership – Georg-Friedrich-Händel-Gesellschaft / Göttinger-Händel-Gesellschaft / Händel-Gesellschaft Karlsruhe
Regular	93	-	80
Regular (with Göttinger Händel Beiträge)	125	-	105
Student	30	-	24
Student (with Göttinger Händel Beiträge)	60	-	48.5
TOTAL REMITTANCE

* This organization does not have a reduced rate for retirees.

† This organization has additional categories of Regular Membership that require a higher membership fee but provide additional benefits (see its website). Arrangements for these other categories may be made directly with Mrs. Pomeroy Kelly (see below).

Those paying in dollars should make their checks payable to AMERICAN HANDEL SOCIETY and mail them to Marjorie Pomeroy Kelly, Treasurer, AMERICAN HANDEL SOCIETY, 49 Christopher Hollow Road, Sandwich, MA 02563. Those wishing to pay in Euros should remit to Stephan Blaut, Treasurer, Georg-Friedrich-Händel-Gesellschaft, Gr. Nikolaistrasse 5, 06108 Halle (Saale), Federal Republic of Germany, and indicate that the payment is for the account of the AHS. Friends of the Handel Institute, London may also pay their AHS dues in sterling by making their checks payable to THE HANDEL INSTITUTE and mailing them to Ms. Sylvia Levi, Hon. Treasurer, The Handel Institute, 254A Kew Road, Richmond TW9 3EG, United Kingdom, with the appropriate annotation. Please do not send checks in Euros or sterling directly to the AHS as we are no longer able to process them.

Online payment options are available at <https://www.americanhandelsociety.org/join/>

Payments in dollars for GFH or HI memberships must be received before May 15.

American Handel Society

100 Brookside Drive Unit B
Andover, MA 01810

ISSN 0888-8701
xli/2